Editorial Guidelines

Selection of articles will be made on the basis of interest and usefulness for our audience and the appropriateness of style. We welcome articles that are broadly related to the topic. Authors are encouraged to query the Managing Editor about specific deadlines and topics before submitting materials.

Submissions should not exceed ten double-spaced typewritten pages. Longer articles may be condensed by the Guest Editor if accepted. Regular columns (Dialogue, On Teaching, Classroom Media) should approximate fifteen hundred to two thousand words in length. Lesson Plans are one to two thousand words in length.

Articles should be written in a style that is readable and accessible for a broad audience of high school, junior high school, and college teachers interested in all aspects of history education, including recent scholarship, curriculum, and developments in educational methodology. We would appreciate suggestions regarding appropriate illustrations for your article. We encourage you to add your own lesson plans, ideas for discussion, etc., to an article that would be appropriate for use in the classroom. Please include biographical information about current and former teaching positions.

The Magazine uses The Chicago Manual of Style, 14th ed. (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1993). Authors should use the documentary-note or humanities style as presented in section 15, "Documentation One." Endnotes should be kept to an absolute minimum. For bibliography and reference lists, we prefer that you use the "Humanities Style" as outlined in section 15.69.

If your article has been prepared on an IBM or compatible word processing system, we would appreciate your sending us a copy of the article on diskette along with the printed manuscript.
